

Patient information from BMJ

Last published: Apr 29, 2025

Enlarged prostate: questions to ask your doctor

As men get older their prostate can get bigger. When this happens doctors call it benign prostatic hyperplasia, or BPH. If you've been diagnosed with an enlarged prostate, you may want to ask your doctor some questions to find out more about this condition and how to deal with it.

Here are some suggestions:

- How do you know I have an enlarged prostate and not a more serious condition?
- Are there any lifestyle changes I can make to improve my symptoms?
- Do you think I should start treatment or wait and see what happens? (This is called watchful waiting or active monitoring). Why?
- Will my symptoms get worse if I don't get treatment?
- When should I consider getting treatment?
- Is having an enlarged prostate likely to cause me other problems? Are there any serious complications?
- Will I need surgery? What does this involve?
- What are the side effects of surgery?
- Can I take tablets to help my symptoms?
- Are there other treatments I can try? What about herbal treatments?
- What side effects do these treatments have?
- Will I need to have regular check-ups? How often will my prostate need to be checked by a physical exam? Are there any other tests I will need?

Enlarged prostate: questions to ask your doctor

The patient information from BMJ Best Practice is regularly updated. The most recent version of Best Practice can be found at bestpractice.bmj.com. This information is intended for use by health professionals. It is not a substitute for medical advice. It is strongly recommended that you independently verify any interpretation of this material and, if you have a medical problem, see your doctor.

Please see BMJ's full terms of use at: bmj.com/company/legal-information. BMJ does not make any representations, conditions, warranties or guarantees, whether express or implied, that this material is accurate, complete, up-to-date or fit for any particular purposes.

© BMJ Publishing Group Ltd 2025. All rights reserved.

What did you think about this patient information guide?

Complete the online survey or scan the QR code to help us to ensure our content is of the highest quality and relevant for patients. The survey is anonymous and will take around 5 minutes to complete.

BMJ Group